

RON HOOD

State Representative

April 22, 2006

Dear

Many politicians talk about defending the Second Amendment. Some tell you how many guns are in their collection. A few are even members of the NRA.

But --- What happens to these politicians, when it's time to vote. Where are they when a stinging editorial in the local newspaper criminalizes gun owners? How do they stand up in the aftermath of the latest school shooting?

When party bosses pressure for so-called "moderate" forms of gun-control to "help the party's image", how do they hold up?

When a politician's career can be advanced with the latest form of "gun-control", does that gun collection in the basement or even his NRA membership keep him from selling-out our Second Amendment rights?

You know the answer to these questions. The politicians fold like a deck of cards! Every Time.

How do I know? Because I am there to see this first-hand.

My name is Ron Hood. I have faced all these pressures as a State Representative. I have a 100% proven record of standing strong for the Second Amendment. This record has earned me the endorsement of the Gun Owners of America and the Buckeye Firearms Association. I am also a five-time endorsee of the National Rifle Association.

I have watched politicians, first-hand, buckle from one phone call from a party leader. I was there when they changed their votes after pressure in a "back-room" caucus meeting.

When they tried to kill legislation without a vote -- to avoid going on record against the Second Amendment, I was there to stand-up and call for the vote.
